Daniel - I don't. I would think the IRS has it. How about your CPA? I am out of the office today but will call you Monday.

Daniel,

I will make that change. We will need to file the 2014 & 2015 franchise tax forms to get the entity reinstated. Have you been using a CPA; if so, who? If you haven't been using a CPA, then I may need to call you to get some info, so what is your phone #?

Also, are you the only Member (owner) of the LLC?

Thanks.

Mike

You have my permission to reinstate it. Also, when I formed my LLCs I lived in South Carolina so I had to use a business partners address in texas, but now I reside here. Can you please change the address on file to the below so all future correspondence comes directly to me? It's currently going to a Mason Stevens, who I am no longer partners with.

Thanks,
Daniel

Hagan,

Thanks. I will make sure Company Agreement includes those provisions. The ownership is as you stated.

Do y'all want me to mail the documents to be signed, or do y'all want to come in to the office with Frank so we can further discuss the agreement?

I think the standard agreement on transfer in the event of death is fine, and I am in agreement on the push/pull. If that would have been in place between the investors in the well we would have avoided a lot of heartache. I also want to confirm that in the company agreement we will have the ownership interests defined as I submitted in my initial email to you.

50% KrisJenn Ranch LLC

50% SCMED Oilfield Consulting

Hagan & Larry,

I'm working on finalizing the Company Agreement for Black Duck Properties, LLC. Since you are partnering with an outside party on this one, I thought you might want some transfer restrictions. Our typical Company Agreement allows transfers due to death, divorce, etc, to an immediate family member. The more restrictive provision would allow current Members the opportunity to buy-out the deceased, divorced, etc Member.

Which way do y'all want it?

Also, oftentimes with unrelated partners we put a push-pull provision in the agreement whereby one partner can offer to buy out another partner for a certain amount, but if the partner doesn't want to sell then he is required to buy out the offering partner. Do you want this type of provision?

Call if you want to discuss.
